

Donovan & Amy

We all want to make a difference in life.

That's why the husband and wife team of Donovan & Amy Wesley decided to go to work in community action.

CADC works in partnership with local, state and national resources to provide a hand up to hard working families and communities. CADC's Community Participation program changes local communities by helping improve run-down conditions, take action with local residents and build upon its network of partners to create initiatives that work.

Donovan and Amy Wesley joined CADC's community participation program to reach out and to make a difference. Donovan works in Camden (Ouachita County), while Amy works in Fordyce (Dallas County). Together, they work to spread the word about education, training and employment opportunities for low-wage workers, the economically disadvantaged, retirees and their families, and to people without a high school or other degree.

The CADC ARRA program gave them the opportunity they had been seeking to do good—making a difference through community action.

At the same time, Amy is working hard to complete her college education. Donovan says the job gives him new and better skills in a more meaningful line of work.

Community action is changing people's lives.

*Donovan and Amy can make a difference through
CADC's
ARRA program.*